My vision loss forced me into early retirement and I did not think I would ever be capable of holding down another job. Being disabled, working within the bureaucratic system, I find that I have to go back to work. Caught up in the federal system no one was willing to help me. I fell into the library What I gained in the class was confidence in myself that I now have that capability. The library offered me training to be able to do that. I've completed my beginning classes learning JAWS, a screen reader allowing blind people to use the computer, and I am getting ready to start my advanced JAWS class in a couple of weeks . I feel now that together with my professional experience from my past life and what I gained from the class, I am able to hold a professional job and be competitive in the work force today, even with my disability.
